A Review of the Foot Ball Season

BY LAWRENCE W. BOYNTON

A REVIEW of the past season indicates from the outset that foot ball in the middle west is fast gaining in popularity, not only with collegians, but with the public at large. This popularity is doubtless due to the elimination, in a large degree, of the incompetent officials, and the professionalism and rowdyism which have heretofore characterized many of the teams in this section of the country. These objectionable features have been nursed, no doubt, by the dominant spirit of the westerner—to win at all hazards. At Washington University, foot ball is fast emerging from its infancy, and has gained a hold to be envied by its rivals. This has been accomplished by untiring, efficient management. The rigid stand taken by the Athletic Council against all semblance of professionalism, and the enforcement, by the chancellor and faculty, of a high standard of excellence in college work on the part of those who represent the University on the gridiron. Thus placed on a sound basis, foot ball has found enthusiasts among the faculty; and the student body has lent its supporting hand with college spirit, so essential to the ultimate success of any college sport.

Under the circumstances, the record of the 1903 team was most satisfactory. Many discouraging obstacles had to be overcome—chief among them, that there were but few experienced players versed in the “ground work” and technique of the game. Then, too, the team was woefully lacking in weight and always pitted against much heavier rivals. Therefore, the men deserve much credit for their record made, and for the manly and sportsman-like spirit they exhibited throughout the season. And to those faithful "scrubs," who were so instrumental in rounding the team into condition, as much credit is due as to the Varsity itself.

The season opened by Washington University defeating Rose "Polly" with a large score. Then Northwestern, with its heavy team, in training two weeks earlier, administered our first defeat. And yet, for everyone in close touch with athletics at Washington University, this game illustrated the "stuff" our team was made of. It was only the weight that won. Then came the game with Lombard, who claimed a victory—but this is no place for argument. With a weakened team, occasioned by rough treatment in the prior game, we only succeeded in playing Rolla a tie game.
Next comes the game of all games against M. S. U. Their boasts had led the "townies" to believe it would be only a practice affair, but as the shadows lengthened and the game came to a close, the spectators realized that one of the greatest games in the history of football, in St. Louis, had been finished, and that neither team had scored. Over-confidence on our part occasioned a decided slump, and Vanderbuilt won the next game, but in the following game with Cincinnati, we were easily victorious, due largely to the heady playing of Stuttle. Washington's most ardent admirers expected to see the team completely overcome by the fast, heavy team of Iowa.
But when the first half was done and no score had been made, and Washington University had been continuously in Iowa territory, it was evident to the most casual onlooker that Washington University was better versed in the game, and had outplayed Iowa.
During the last half, however, weight told and Iowa scored twice while we scored but once. The game was replete with spectacular playing, and the large Thanksgiving crowd evidenced the fast gaining popularity of the sport in St. Louis.

The post-season’s contest with St. Louis University was easily won, and silenced any question as to the local championship. The steady, resolute playing of Lucky, Cassell, Snell, Pitzman, Garstang, Robinson and Sloan; the consistent aggressiveness of Krause, Heumann, Hope and Bishoff; and brilliant work of Stuttle Tolson and Smith, together with the conscientious "team work" of all, made the season a success and the team an enviable record.

I am not given to forecasting the future, but it would seem that the 1904 team should surpass all previous records. The conditions under which its contests will take place during the World’s Fair, and the magnificent new athletic field upon which games will be played, should inspire that team to so acquit itself that its record may always be dear to the memory of the Alumni of Washington University.
