O wad, some power giftie gie us
To see ourselves as others see us.—Fussees.
A sadder and a wiser man, He rose the morrow morn.—Fresh after papa gets first flunk notice.
Samuel Cupples

By the death of Samuel Cupples on January sixth of this year, there passed from this scene of activity a man whose conduct in life was true to his religious convictions and whose generous interest in this Institution has been surpassed by none. He was of that noble type of man whose appreciation of high ideals and lofty purposes consists in living by them. He found the secret of true happiness in combining his personal interests with those of others and always met with hearty co-operation and support in his many endeavors, both commercial and philanthropic.

His splendid business principles and his excellent managing and organizing ability built up the largest woodenware establishment in the world. He was also interested in other industries, and at the time of his death was president of three business establishments bearing his name.

His gifts for religious, charitable and educational purposes were many and were bestowed without ostentation. He built the Methodist Orphans’ Home as a memorial to his wife. He gave generously to his church and to various educational institutions, besides bestowing a great number of individual benefactions. His gifts to Washington University amount to nearly two million dollars including the two buildings bearing his name, which stand on the campus as fitting monuments to his generous interest in the Institution.
