CTOBER 1st, 1913, will long be remembered by the Class of '16 as the beginning of the metamorphose stage that is necessary to go through in order to crystalize a "Red-neck" into a real "Doc."

We pride ourselves now as almost finished products in Dentistry, and are anticipating great things for our class, though it must have been interesting for the Faculty to have seen the general process going on within us.

This class has always looked upon itself with pride and confidence, whether it was because it made the Junior Class of '13 show the white flag or whether it be mere egotism, it is hard to say, but nevertheless we are proud of ourselves and our chosen profession.
While we all look forward to the day of graduation, we still realize how hard it will be to say "good-bye" to our old classmates who have come so closely into our lives and who for three years have helped so loyally to bear the difficulties and obstacles that always go with the things that are worth having.

We shall always remember with reverence the debt we owe to the Dean and Faculty for the kindness, patience and knowledge they have so generously bestowed upon us during our stay here.

Here's wishing the school the greatest success in its future work, also success to the Class of '16. May our years be long in life and our hours short in office.

Yours for success,

N the twenty-ninth of September, with eager thoughts of the future, we stood upon the threshold of the great and mystic order from which so many freshmen are annually so unceremoniously ejected. Each man, having duly passed inspection by John, King of the High Priests, was assigned to the tender mercies of the Instructors to His Majesty. To High Priest Forester fell the task of revealing to us the most important and most tedious portion of the initiation. In his sacred cell many profitable hours were spent delving into the secrets of the organization, and under his guidance the thirty-nine associates endeavored to apply the principles that had been expounded by the learned Doctors.

The brothers have already shown marked favoritism to the various Leaders whose fields have for them the greatest appeal. Some have worshipped in the clinic, while eight illustrious young men have so attached themselves to the Pathology Department that they may often be seen in the laboratory, struggling over intricate problems until long after closing hours.

In the technical laboratory, however, all of the brothers have vied with one another, each trying to display the greatest devotion to the science of Dentistry.

Although much time has thus been spent in consecrated effort, yet John, the King of Priests, has often felt called upon to end the efforts of the Glee Club, whose songs, like certain diseases, are apt to break out at any moment. Nor have sports been neglected, for the brethren have acquired uncanny accuracy in hurling plaster chairs at inquisitorial Freshmen.

By much application, diligence, and united effort we dealt so soundly with the last Mid-Year's Examinations that King John felt moved to speak publicly in council concerning us. "Never," said he, "have my Junior subjects shown so great an intimacy with the most hidden secrets of the profession. All praise to them."

The men of Nineteen Hundred and Seventeen have indeed responded nobly and truly to the efforts of the Expositors. We have played hard, but have worked even harder. We have taken our work most seriously, and have prepared ourselves for the tasks of the future. And not one of Saint Appollonias' secrets that has been revealed to us has failed to impress upon our minds the true dignity and responsibility of the Science of Dentistry.

Fifty-four students, one of the largest Freshmen Classes ever enrolled, began work in the Dental School last September 28. An altogether natural and pardonable feeling of timidity, pardonable because of the unusual strength of the Sophomores, threw the individual members of the class upon one another so continually for strategic purposes that they had soon become a well-acquainted body. A temporary election placed “Budd” Kling in the President’s chair, with Stark acting as Secretary. The final organization of the class took place on November 27, when the class elected Brandenburg, President; Stark, Vice-President; Beinker, Secretary; Petty, Treasurer; Nelson, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Kling, Hatchet Representative.

The class soon gave active signs that it intended to uphold the reputation for “pep” that has been established at the Dental School in the last few years. They not only acquired a proficiency in tossing plaster casts hither and yon, in an apparently dilatory manner, but with most amazing effectiveness, thereby discouraging similar aesthetic exercise on the part of the Sophomores, but also took an important part in Campus Athletics. Benway, Nelson, and Harding found places for themselves on the Freshman Squad, while “Buddy” Kling, on the Varsity, was one of the most dependable of the many good pieces with which Edmunds played the victorious season.

But if work, play, spirit and general attitude can be taken as any criterion, then to account for all the good fellows in the class would make it appear that the writer of this account were trying to compete with the manager of the famous “fifty-seven varieties.” So, we can only say that the present Freshman Dental Class is thoroughly alive in every part of it, and every part of it for the new Washington Spirit, that has truly made the Campus a meeting-place for everyone.
