SCHOOL OF BOTANY
The Henry Shaw School of Botany continues to be one of the foremost schools of botany in the country and graduates of the school rank among the leading botanists of the world. Situated in and affiliated with The Missouri Botanical Garden it affords facilities for the study of flower culture and kindred subjects that are second to none.

In the past year a 1200-acre tract situated on the Meramec River in Franklin County has been acquired and will be used as a plant reserve and experiment station. The new tract will allow almost unlimited space for the growing of trees and shrubs too large for the present garden. Graduate students in the school will now be able to carry on research work in this line to a much greater extent than formerly. In particular it is expected that the growing of plants and flowers with the view of selecting and developing certain types will be carried out.
