The Hatchet of distinction! It is thus that the staff of the 1927 Hatchet wish to have their book recognized. It has been our wish to produce a year book that is truly representative of Washington University, and one that will mark an advancing step in the publication of the Hatchet on the campus. How well we have succeeded remains for you to judge.

To publish an annual of this size is no small task. Many obstacles have been faced and all of these were successfully pushed aside. Many times under the adverse criticism of many members of the student body we have felt like giving up, but of course such wild thoughts will never reach materialization, and you now see before you our idea of a typical Washington production.

In the 1927 Hatchet you will notice many innovations. We were not governed by undue conservatism, but neither did our thoughts and ideas approach radicalism. Many other things were planned for our book but financial difficulties forced us to abandon them. However the many changes in the book meant the raising of a large amount of money, as the cost of this production exceeded those of the past years by a great amount.

The first change in the policy of past years was that in the size of the book. This step was not taken without thought, but was only done after a great deal of deliberation. The book of last year was rather cumbersome and if it remained the same size this year, it would have been still harder to handle. In making this change a great number of pages were dispensed with and what we believe a neater book is the result. Few of the universities of the country have the smaller size book, and all of the leading books of the country are the same page size as the 1927 Hatchet. This also caused us to change from the former size, as the Hatchet should take its place among the great books, and this we believe to be a step toward that accomplishment.

The imposing towers of University Hall, the quadrangle where fond memories will forever lie—it is this you see portrayed on the new cover. "By these things you shall know us," and by these towers Washington is known throughout the land. In designing the new cover the artist always held in mind that it was to be typical of the university and probably the most typical thing about Washington is the majestic towers of the administration building.

Throughout portions of the book we have placed emphasis on the “carry-on” spirit of our alumni, we have portrayed many of their successful enterprises, and have contrasted the activities of their lives with those of the modern student. Many of our alumni have been very successful and while space permitted mention of only a few, there have been hundreds who through their noble efforts have upheld the name of Washington. All true and worthy efforts of an alumnus brings credit to the name of his Alma Mater.

In the opening section of the book there are eight campus views portrayed in color. These are taken from oil paintings done by a well known local artist. The remaining of the art work was done by this same artist and by students of the St. Louis School of Fine Arts, a department of Washington University.

While our greatest thoughts were to produce a Hatchet that would be appreciated by the student body, we also attempted to keep in mind the contests held annually for college books. In these contests all of the leading books of the country are entered and a victory is hard earned and valued greatly. In the past two years the Hatchet has done very well by receiving honorable mention, but it is the hope of the 1927 Hatchet Board to secure even a higher rating, and how well the judges think we have done is still another thing that remains to be seen.

Changes must be made gradually and we hope that the Hatchet Boards following us will attempt to produce changes in their Hatchets which in time will lead to an ideal book, if such an accomplishment is possible.

As a closing word the Hatchet Board of the Class of 1927 appeal to the students of this great university to lend assistance to our successors. A yearbook can mean a great thing, only if the staff receives the unfaltering support of all.
